Bright, practical helpful and thoroughly interesting is the September issue of "Fashions."

The fiction of the number is furnished by Opie Read and Octave Thanet, the former a breezy Western Story, the latter the beginning of a serial.

Early autumn styles are shown in bewildering array, the French houses of Worth, Virot, Paquin and metropolitan designers being liberally represented, and, as usual, Diane Du Bois contributes enough suggestions for the home dressmaker to keep her thoroughly in touch with all the latest fabrics and trimmings.

A variety of short articles for various members of the family, and the usual departments of Wit and Humor, Best Stories, Graphology, Physiognomy and Horoscope complete the number.

HOLDING MEETINGS.

Strikers Preparing for the Big Convention.

President Dolan and Other Leaders Believe the Compromise Price of Sixty-five Cents Will be Accepted.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Sept. 6.—Mass meetings are being held today all over the Pittsburg district by the striking miners for the purpose of appointing delegates to the district convention, which meets here tomorrow, to consider the Columbus compromise and elect delegates to the national convention at Columbus on Wednesday. While none of the leading miners have stated that they will contest for instructions to the Columbus delegates to vote for sixty-nine cents or nothing, it is thought that the sixty-nine cent men will be in a minority and unable to successfully urge their plan. A number of operators have received assurances that the miners formerly at work for them will ratify the agreement arrived at in Columbus and will vote to return to work at the sixty-five cent rate.

President Dolan, Secretary Wil Ham Warner and District Organizer Cameron Miller all say that they feel sure the great majority of the miners will vote to accept the sixty-five cent rate. President Dolan is of the opinion that the settlement of the strike on this basis is the very best that can be accomplished at this time. At that rate the big bituminous shippers can get in line and nearly all of the mines in the district will be at work within a week from the time of the acceptance of the proposition of the operators by the miners. The mining officials say that the struggle against the New York and Cleveland Coal company will be pushed up to the end of the year unless the company is beaten before that time. The acceptance of the sixty-five cent rate, they say, in no way affects the price to be paid the diggers at the mines of this company, and until the same workers can force President W. P. DeArmit to pay the district price without the differential in his favor the fight against him will be continued.

THE SITUATION IN WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, W. Va., Sept. 6.—The leaders in the miners' strike are resting on their oars, waiting upon the outcome of the Columbus convention. They are, however, using their best efforts to keep the men from returning to work, but only with moderate success.

The movement toward a settlement has gone so far that all see West Virginia will cut a small figure and men are going back to work wherever a chance offers. There were no meetings nor demonstrations in the Fairmont region yesterday, while in the Kanawha valley, addresses were made at only two points. The men in the various regions who are striking held meetings today to select delegates to attend the Columbus convention. The delegates were instructed to oppose any settlement that does not include West Virginia and other regions outside of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The strikers don't expect to have any weight in the convention, but they will deem it unjust if their claims are not recognized, and will be in position to warn the national organization that if West Virginia is deserted in the hour of victory, it will be unwise to ever say sympathy in this state again.

Steps are being taken to have all local labor organizations and the Ohio valley Trades and Labor assembly represented in the Chicago conference September 27.

CHINESE CYCLIST.

Foo Lee Beats All Competitors in a Contest.

Makes The Six Miles in Fast Order—Was His Boast in the Recorded for the Race.

NILES, Mich., Sept. 6.—Foo Lee, an up-to-date Niles Chinese laundryman, is the first of his country men to win a bicycle race in the United States. Some months ago Foo was presented to buy a bicycle and in a few weeks was able to ride as well as any one. He accompanied American boys on long spins and surprised them by making good his boasts to "make 'em go and ride 'em feet off." He grew more proficient of the wheel, and at a carnival of sports held here, entered in one of the events, and this wide attraction had the effect of bringing out an immense crowd.

In the race were entered some fast riders, but they were no match with the Chinaman, as he beat them handily. The sports are trying to reduce Foo Lee to give up the laundry business and devote him self to racing.

Robbers Blockade Bank.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 6.—Robert Blackley, president of the advisory board of the international commercial congress, which met in Philadelphia in June; president of the local dock commission and ex-president of the commercial club, died last night after a brief illness. Blackley was one of the best known men in the city.

Apache Indians Causing Trouble.

GLOBE, Ariz., Sept. 6.—About 1,000 Apache Indians are off the reservation and are scattering through the Pinal and Superstition Mountains, killing deer and gathering wild fruits. None of them are provided with guns and all are armed. They have committed only minor depredations around the ranches of the region, but the settlers are alarmed and on guard. The Apaches are all from the White mountain reservation, in the vicinity of San Carlos.

YELLOW FEVER.

No Doubt of the Nature of the Malady.

A Commission of the State Boards of Health Announced to Make an Investigation Today.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 6.—Governor McLaurin has just received the following telegram from the two members of the state board of health, who went to Ocean Springs, Miss., yesterday, to investigate the yellow fever scare:

After a most thorough investigation in every conceivable light, it is the unanimous opinion of the representatives of the Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi state boards of health and the marine hospitals service, that the fever now prevailing in Ocean Springs is yellow fever.

SMOOTH GENTS.

Are These Four Characters Reported to Be.

Interesting Gossip Taken in a Quartet of Supposed Professional Pickpockets.—Police News.

Detective Collins last night arrested four men, whose appearance would indicate that they follow crooked work for a living. This is the conclusion reached by the marshal this morning when the quartet was arraigned in police court. The prisoners gave the names of Frank Murrill, Charles Ray, John Chatlan and Robert Blanchard, and told stories that might impress the unsophisticated with the idea that they were angels in disguise. The court thought that their main object in coming to Fort Wayne was to pick pockets and ply thievery during the Labor day excitement. This opinion is shared by the officers. Twenty days was the sentence passed upon each one.

NOTES.

Two train jumpers were let go this morning.

Officer Collins arrested a drunken individual named James Jameson last night, as the latter was firing a revolver hit and miss. The prisoner put up his watch and was released.

LABOR CELEBRATES.

Sons of Toil and Their Families at Lakeside Grove.

Principal Address Made by W. H. Roach, of Toledo, Which Served Free Grown of Sports.

The Labor day celebration at Lakeside grove is at its height as THE SENTINEL goes to press. At 12:45 the members of the various labor organizations, led by the Trades and Labor council and First regiment band, marched to the scene of the celebration and the program was opened by the introduction of the principal speaker of the day, W. H. Roach, of Toledo, secretary-treasurer of the International Union of Bicycle Workers. A number of distinguished citizens occupied seats on the platform, among them being Mayor Scheer.

The program was carried out as published in last Monday's SENTINEL. It included a base ball game between the mechanics and barbers, bicycle races, swimming matches, foot races, and other sports, in all of which there was shown a lively competition on account of the numerous fine prizes offered to winners. A taking feature of the day was the performance given this afternoon by the Zavarra Charles specialty company, which contains a number of very clever artists. The same company will give a show at Library hall tonight.

AT THE PARK.

The Robison park management is giving a good program this afternoon, one of the features of which is a balloon ascension. An attractive program will be given tonight and the park will be illuminated especially for the occasion.

DENVER, Colo., Sept. 6.—The officers of the Pacific Express company estimate the amount of money stolen from their safe by the train robbers near Folsom, N. M., Friday night, at not more than $2,500. This was all the safe contained and it is supposed the robbers took it all.

MURDERER EXHORTS

Condemned Man Preaches With Great Power.

Murderer Perry Asks the Souls of Lawyers in a Sermon Preach With His Eloquence.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 6.—Fulton county jail was yesterday the scene of as unique an occurrence as has ever happened within its walls.

Horace G. Perry, the condemned murderer of Boy Lazier, who is to hang for his crime Wednesday at Decatur, led religious services in the prison chapel in such an impressive and solemn manner that the large congregation of felons and outlaws grew violently hysterical under his power.

Rev. R. S. Stevenson, who has been in the habit of conducting the Sunday jail services, at Perry's urgent request, yesterday morning gave place to him. Perry's text was taken from the seventeenth chapter of Acts. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and Thou Shalt be saved."

He said that as the hours of his life were fast shortening he felt it a duty to use them in an effort to save other souls. He pleaded earnestly with the motley throng surrounding him that they would mend their ways and lead religious lives, whether they spent them in confinement or were released.

During his powerful exhortation the air had been filled with restrain ed sobs and the sound of weeping, but when he referred to the desolate state into which his widow and children would be thrown upon his death the excited audience became almost insane with emotion.

So potent was his spell over them that Perry, to break the nerve-destroying excitement, proposed a hymn. Turner Dalk, the notorious outlaw, himself under death sentence and whose son Tom was executed two months ago, led the singing, and at its conclusion the audience bled slowly out, stopping to shake hands with Perry.

Perry has a exceedingly loyal friends, and to forestall any attempt to escape him on his night with journey to the gallows Wednesday morning Governor Atkinson will call out the troops.

Perry says he is confident that his children will live to see his innocence vindicated and he proud to realize that he gave up his life to save their mother's honor.

NORTHERN INDIANA NOTES.

Owing to an epidemic of diphtheria at Laporte, the parochial schools will probably be closed.

Ben Yards, Peru constable, is missing. It is thought he has fled from fear of consequences of official irregularities.

In a saloon brawl at Milford last week George Phoebus assaulted Mel Cottrell with a beer glass and the latter's condition is serious.

The recent discovery of oil at Peru has stirred up Wabash citizens and a company is organizing to explore for oil in that territory.

Mrs. Aaron Pugh, who was hurt in a runaway accident on the Fort Wayne and Bluffton road, died of her injuries at Bluffton Saturday.

Dr. F. M. Pearson, a prominent pioneer and a leading physician, died at Warsaw, Saturday. During the war he was a surgeon in the Thirty-sixth Indiana regiment.

The new house of worship erected by the congregation of St. Mary's Catholic church of Huntington will be dedicated on the 9th of October. The entire expense, $100,000, is borne by John and Bridget Roche, and it is a gift to the congregation.

In the town of Lagrange resides the father of Alfred Packer, now serving a forty year sentence in the Colorado state penitentiary for murder. The old gentleman is ninety four years old. Alfred Packer's crime, according to his confession, was one of the most shocking of which there is any record. With a party of his companions he was lost in the mountains, in 1874, and he killed them and ate their flesh. He was arrested, but made his escape and ten years later was convicted at Salt Lake City. He now wants a pardon and his father will try to assist him in getting it.

Engineer John Eagan was fatally hurt, and Fireman Green was badly scalded on the back and legs.

MILLERS SHUT OUT.

Minneapolis Boys Couldn't Solve Herr's Curves.

The Big Fellows Had the Visitors at His Mercy and Cinched Hot Ten Hits—Base Ball Scores.

A greater exhibition of pitching was never seen in a Fort Wayne diamond than Big Ed Herr gave yesterday against the Minneapolis Western league team. Two petty singles, one of which was a scratch, was all they could get and Herr gave them as humiliating a shut out as they have experienced this season. Herr was pretty nearly the whole works, but he was magnificently backed up by Tommy Campbell, whose knowledge of Western league batsman was of consequence in the result. The score shows that twenty-seven Millers were put out and that they were at bat just twenty-seven times. Only four men reached first base, a base on balls and an attempt to sacrifice and two singles, enabling those to go down. The lone man who reached third got there on Fitch's failure to handle Herr's easy assist for a double play. Fort Wayne scored once in the fifth on Herr's single and O'Meara's two-bag drive to center. Three runs came in in the ninth on singles by McKivitt, Babb and Herr, and Fitch's three-base hit. The attendance was fair. The score:

Fort Wayne	0	0	0	0	1	0	0	0	2—4

Base hits—Fort Wayne, 11; Minneapolis, 2. Errors—Fort Wayne, 2. Minneapolis, 2. Batteries—Herr and Campbell; Herman and Miller. Umpire—Burton.

SATURDAY'S GAMES.

The Fort Wayne won the third game of the series at Youngstown on Saturday, owing to the fine work of Patterson in the slab, freely hitting and all round better playing than that put up by their opponents. James J. Corbett played first base for Youngstown and made two errors, but no hits or runs. Score:

WESTERN LEAGUE GAMES.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 5.—Yesterday's game was decidedly uninteresting and almost featureless, except for W. Smith's two home runs. A local high school student, M. Smith, did clever work at first. Beck was called down by Steckel for being slow, and secured a fine by profane back talk. Score:

Youngstown	0	0	1	2	0	0	2	1	0—8
Toledo	0	0	2	2	0	2	4	0	3—13

Hits—Toledo, 18; Youngstown, 8. Errors—Toledo, 4; Youngstown, 6. Batteries—Beck and Arthur; Rettling and Zimram.

DAYTON, Ohio, Sept. 5.—The Governors came near suffering a humiliating shut-out yesterday. Dayton played in good form, and with its former pitcher, Brown, a south paw, who was loaned by the Clevelands, won easily. The visitors only run was scored on two errors by the Old Soldiers. Score:

BOSTON PARK LEAGUE.

The race for the city champion ship will close next Sunday. The boy Kings will play two games on that day, one with the Keystones and one with the Blues. The Shamrocks have but one game to play, the Rifles being their opponents. If the Keystones win out with the Spy Runs, and the Shamrocks show their heels to the Rifles, Spy Run, Keystones and Shamrocks will be in for first place. Fans who have watched the work of the different clubs, however, expect that the Blues will be the club which will take a fall out of the leaders. Lutz and Beilken will do the battery work for the Blues, and with a good team back of them will be a hard combination to beat. The clubs line up as follows:

Spy Runs	Keystones	Shamrocks
Shamrocks	Blues	Rifles
Keystones	Shamrocks	Blues
Blues	Rifles	Spy Runs
Rifles	Spy Runs	Keystones

SHAMROCKS KEYSTONES.

Inability to connect safely with Quinn's benders at opportune times, and the timely slick work of the Shamrocks, tells the story of the Keystones defeat at Robison park yesterday afternoon. Collins, who played second base for the Shamrocks, put up a brilliant game. His stick work was sensational. The score:

Shamrocks	2	0	2	1	1	2	0	4	0—13
Keystones	1	4	0	0	0	1	2	0	0—8

Hits—Shamrock, 12; Keystones, 9. Errors—Shamrocks, 6; Keystones, 6. Batteries—Quinn and Fuhl; Fitzpatrick and Nolan. Umpire—Bellinger.

SPY RUN STANDARDS.

The top notchers entertained the Standards in all departments and won in a walk at Robison park yesterday afternoon. Philabaum's playing at the third bag and Monahan's work in the left garden, were the features of the one-sided contest. The score:

Spy Runs	1	0	0	0	2	0	2	1	—12
Standards	0	0	0	2	0	0	1	0	0—3

Hits—Spy Runs, 8; Standards, 5. Errors—Spy Runs, 6; Standards, 6. Batteries—Deasie and Hoffer; Miller and Meyers.

MIND A BLANK.

Sad Plight of John Reinecke, an Old Citizen.

Loses Suddenly Income, Reaches Into the Till and Shoot Himself Through Early Morn.

At 5 o'clock this morning John Reinecke, of 520 Buchanan street, went violently insane. Notwithstanding the restraint of his wife and children he rushed into the yard, only partially clad and began singing sacred hymns. The entire neighborhood was aroused at the unusual performance. The patrol wagon was sent for and the unfortunate man was taken to the hospital at the jail. A commission in lunacy will probably be appointed to examine him.

Mr Reinecke is an old and respected citizen. For years past he has worked as coremaker at the Bass foundry and was an industrious wage earner. He has a wife and family of five children.

READY FOR WALLS.

New Court House Will Soon Begin to Loom Up.

Stone Work Will be Commenced Tomorrow—Interesting Place With Bugle Representatives.

This plant is located at Fairfield avenue in the Wabash yards and if cost the contractors $5,000 to fit it up in shape for business. The stone is received in the rough from the Bedford quarries at Brazil, Ind., and finished ready for the masonry work. The work that has already been done on the court house foundation has been hidden from view by the fence enclosure, and now that the work on the walls is to begin the public will soon see material signs of the coming most attractive monument to Allen county.

FARMERS' DAY

ABUSES CHARGED

In the Management of the Indiana State Prison.

E. L. Wilcox, Just Released at Michigan City, Says the Prisoners Have a Hard Lot.

E. L. Wilcox, who has just returned from the state prison at Michigan City, where he served a year's sentence for forgery committed while business manager of the late Evening Post, of this city, says the management of the prison under Warden Hurley is the source of great complaint from the convicts. Mr. Wilcox says the prisoners are treated with unusual severity, are poorly fed and worked in many cases beyond human endurance. Wilcox states that a convict named Ferguson, sent from Fort Wayne, was whipped and flung into the dungeon, from the effect of which treatment Ferguson became insane. He further says that there is great partiality shown in the treatment of prisoners and cites the case of Theodore P. Houghey and Frances Coffin, the Indianapolis bank wreckers, who are furnished comfortable quarters, easy tasks and allowed very great liberty. Jim Wilson, editor of the Indianapolis People, sent up for pending indictment matter through the mails, through influential friends, is able to have an easy time. This is also true of Reuben Sawyer, D. D. Mosely and Frank Bost, the DeKalb county officials sent up for crookedness.

Wilcox says a man who holds an important official position in the prison is not a temperance man either in theory or practice, and intimates that he might make the statement much stronger and not exaggerate the matter.

Wilcox says that as for himself he has no complaint to make of his own treatment. He had very agreeable employment and was well treated and well fed. He says he wishes to give the foregoing statements publicity solely in behalf of the convicts who bear the brunt of mismanagement of the prison.

This is labor's own day and every body should have some part in doing it honor.

The heated controversy between Senator Chandler and Senator Frye is rapidly approaching that ominous stage where somebody's going to be called a liar.

Labor's Holiday.

Today in all the cities throughout the country there is an almost general suspension of toil and the wealth producers of the nation are celebrating labor's annual holiday. All over the land men have left their accustomed scenes of labor and, away from the grime of toil and the roar of traffic, removed from the fret and fever of everyday activity, are engaged in proper and festal observance of this great national occasion.

A holiday distinctly significant of labor is of comparatively recent observance, and the provision of law for the holiday, indeed, is quite recent. Ten years ago the day was recorded only by isolated observances in a few large cities of the country. But the practice of those few cities grew into a custom in nearly all industrial centers and for several years there has not been an annual recurrence of the day when every city and town alone 10,000 population did not in some way honor the occasion. In 1894 congress made it a legal holiday and in this year of grace Labor day is by law a holiday not only in the nation, but in thirty-nine states, one of which is Indiana.

Well it is for those who work and for the whole land, that once a year the mighty army of industry puts away the tools of craft and the implements of toil to turn out to parade with music and banners, to spend the day in happy commingling, at sports and games and in listening to the oratory of those who can fittingly discuss the great problems of working and living. Thus do we pay most tribute to

"The nobility of labor, the long patience of toil."

Labor day has begotten and has nurtured a true fraternalism among workingmen that was never known before. It brings craft into contact with craft, as labor with toilers, and from such contact there is struck a spark that kindles a warmer fellowship, a deeper glow of human brotherhood. It interprets the mutual dependence of those who toil and enlightens labor as to its true dignity and power. The day has come to be a palpable educational force in the mighty congress of toil, and so long as the same wise lines shall be pursued as heretofore, each year will bring labor to better conditions, to a higher plane of citizenship, to closer and more enduring brotherhood, to more beneficent usefulness.

THE LAST LEAF.

I saw him once before
As he passed by the door,
And again
The pavement stones resound
As he totters o'er the ground
With his cane.

They say that in his prime,
Ere the pruning knife of Time
Cut him down,
Not a better man was found
By the crier on his round
Through the town.

But now he walks the street,
And he looks at all he meets
Sad and slow,
And his face has lost a grace
That it once had in the past,
We know.

The merry laugh is fled,
Sad the lips that he has kissed
In the prime,
And the eyes to be loved so fond
Have long since turned to stone
Many a year ago—
Long ago.

Then he had a kindly word
And his cheek was like a rose
In the close,
But now his face is as thin
And its wrinkles are in the skin
Like a shroud,
And a crack is on his knee,
And a remediable creak
In his back.

Dance if you can
For one night and grin
At him here,
But the old, crooked, worn-out hat,
And the boots that, and all that,
Are so queer!

And if I should live to be
The last leaf upon the tree
In the spring,
Let them smile, as I do now,
At the old forgotten beau
Where I cling.

POLLINET'S DUEL.

I was indebted to my good friend Felix Depaille, professor of music in our town, for the following story, which happened in those bad old days when scoundrels who were expert with weapons terrorized over a whole city because the insane code of honor compelled an inoffensive citizen to go out to meet certain death at the hands of a ruffian who had wantonly insulted him.

"Ah, those days, mon ami!" said Depaille. "So different from my life now! You love not the duelists in England. You laugh at us and hear from us your brutal arms and fists when he insults you. That reminds to mind the Englishman we came to Dijon 50, 60 years ago and fought a duel. Ah, but he was a dude, that Englishman!"

"It is a good story, I can see," I said, glancing at Depaille's deep set eyes, sparkling.

"You will love it, mon ami, but in those days I was furious against your brutal ways. I have learned better since. This Englishman, you, come to Dijon. He was great and rich, and he was named Sir Kevin Booth, lawyer, but in those days we did not understand your English titles, and we called him Milor Sir Lord Booth. He was young and very rich, and he came at about France with his attendant, who was his secretary, perhaps remaining a day in one place, a month in another. He was a great, tall man, with powerful limbs, but he was lazy—oh, so lazy! When he seated himself, it was to sprawl on three chairs. He looked upon us as an inferior race and was very insolent and arrogant, but spent lavishly; also he disdained to speak our language, which he called lingo, and M. Pointon, his secretary, interpreted for him. Milor, I assure you, was well known in the city, where he stand three weeks.

"Now, at that time Pollinet, one of the most infamous duelists, was residing in Dijon, where he had made himself feared. Let when Milor Booth came to Dijon Pollinet, to the relief of good citizens, was away in Paris, and there were many who hoped he might meet a better man than himself in the capital and never return, but they were disappointed. Pollinet returned, more insolent than ever.

"You must understand this Pollinet professed to have the greatest hatred for the English, whom he declared were all brutal, ignorant and clumsy, unfit for association with a refined race and to kill whom was a duty and a service to humanity. At that time you were not popular among us—it is often so, my friend—and these sentiments were looked upon as highly patriotic and were applauded by his friends. What more natural than that on his return to Dijon he was told of the rich English milor who was what you call—swaggering about the city in his insolent way!

"'Ah!' said Pollinet, 'one of that accursed race in this city? Well, we shall see. We shall see! If it be possible to force him to fight, there shall be one less of those insolent fools. Bah, but I doubt it! They are cowards and will lick the dust rather than fight. Where is he to be found?'

"'He is staying at the Hotel Lion, but he is often in the cafes,' said Bracemaer, a big fellow, but a vo-wel fellow, who looked up to Pollinet as his master.

"'Tonight, then,' said Pollinet, with a menacing smile. 'This Pollinet, I must tell you, was a great fellow of nearly 4 feet, broad and plump and a very good liver. He must have the best and plenty of it, and he daily increased in embonpoint, though he lost little of his activity. With rapier or pistol he was supreme and it was said that he had already killed his twenty-first. He had served in the army as a colonel, so, he declared, though there were some who could take an oath that he began life as a baker's apprentice and was after ward valet to Colonel de la Tournaye.

"That evening Pollinet sent three of his friends out into the city to obtain news of the Englishman, and presently Bracemaer returned breathless to say that milor had just entered the Cafe Grande Monarque, in Rue Turenne.

"'Come, then, my friends,' said Pollinet, with a lazy, cold smile, 'let us call on this terrible Englishman. You shall hear a rare sport, on the word of Pollinet unless he is a coward, and even in that case I shall terrify him.'

"Laughing loudly, Pollinet and six of his friends set out for the cafe. The evening was warm, the streets were crowded, and as Pollinet and his friends passed along they were jeered at by the people, who knew the character of the man. Pollinet was well known to the people, who had seen him fight twenty times, and he was the terror of the city. Pollinet was invisible. His features had been terribly battered, and he greatly left Dijon without leaving his address with any of his friends.

"'You English,' said Depaille, in concluding his story, 'do not understand the usages of the field of honor, but you are cowards in the brutal game of boxing.'—Tit Bits.

Lord Lonsdale as a Boxer.

Lord Lonsdale is master of the most fashionable pack of foxhounds in England. It is no easy task to control a field which may number 200 horsemen and horsewomen, but Lonsdale did it so well that when he wished to resign the mastership the hunt guaranteed a largely increased subscription, to enable him to meet the annually swelling expense of hunting the country. A performance of Lord Lonsdale's which excited great interest at the time was the driving match he arranged with Lord Shrewsbury in March, 1891. Lord Shrewsbury, owing to a misapprehension, did not come to the starting post. Lord Lonsdale did and performed the truly remarkable feat of driving (1) a single horse, (2) a pair, (3) a four-in-hand and (4) a pair, riding postilion five miles each over a bad stretch of road in 55 minutes 35 4-5 seconds, or 20 miles in 56 minutes 55 4-5 seconds, including changes of vehicle.

The Soul and the Soft.

Professor Dollinger, one of the most erudite theologians of the Roman church, remarked in a lecture before the Munich Academy of Sciences, on the subject of "Founders of Religion," that religions did not drop ready made from heaven, nor could religious systems find a permanent resting place without a soil prepared to receive new ideas, on which they could germ and spread. In fact, the ideas must have been in a state of germination, growing gradually to fruition, to spring into life at the touch of the founder's magic wand. It is the same with nations. They do not spring like Minerva out of Jupiter's head, full fledged. They are of slow growth and when the proper leader and legislator steps upon the stage the material must be ready to be formed into homogeneous whole.—Minerva.

THE BABY'S BED.

"The baby must have a cradle!"
The first young mother said.
"He must have a place of his very own
To rock his pretty head.
He shall have a down pillow
And a coverlet soft and white,
And the lullaby mother will croon to him
With richness, beauty and might."

"Oh, yes, he must have a cradle!"
The second young mother said.
"As he slumbers in tranquil leisure
The pastry cook cannot wend.
He will take a world of comfort
As he sleeps, simply swinging
Half making half need of sleeping,
While his mother rocks him and sings."

So planned the fond young parents,
As they watched their darling's grave,
Yet there did not lie in the cradle
For the baby's young place,
But they bought a tiny coffin,
As white as their dreams were,
And they laid the little sleeper
With a sudden weight of care.

Then they laid the beautiful baby
In a bed of his very own,
And covered it with flowers
And roses white and half blown,
And his pillow was soft and downy,
The blossoms covered his breast,
And he slept and smiled as on waking
To despair his quiet rest.

A Burglars Trick.

A favorite trick of burglars operating in country mansions with large grounds attached, says a detective, is to fix lines of string or wire a few inches above the grass and gravel, so that in the event of discovery the pursuers may trip and fall down. In a big house in somewhat this one evening some house breakers were heard at work while the family was gathered together at the dinner table. The alarm being given, all the gentlemen and manservants started off in pursuit, some one way and some another.

The butler, rather a portly individual, and one of the footmen caught sight of the thieves making for the wall bounding the grounds. They saw them pass over the rustic bridge that crossed the stream; but, knowing that the latter was very shallow, the butler and his assistant thought to make a short cut by wading through.

Unfortunately the thieves had anticipated this maneuver and had stretched a piece of wire a foot or so above the edge of the bank, with the inevitable result that both the pursuers fell floundering into the water. The burglars shouted out their sarcastic congratulations and at once disappeared into the darkness.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fresh Tom Horsed.

Umpire Tim Hurst has a way peculiarly his own in settling his troubles with ball players on the field. He inflicts less fines than any of the umpires, and yet keeps the players pretty well in check. In one game a certain well known captain made a rush at Tim, at the same time uttering all sorts of terrible threats. Tim met the kicker before he got to the plate, and, after allowing him to pour forth a flame of threats and protests, Hurst put his mouth close to the player's ear and said coolly:

"Now, you're getting a bit cheaky, I see. You've made a couple of good steps, knocked out a couple of hits, and you think you're solid with the crowd. Well, I'll just tell you something. I'll give you the key to my room at the hotel, where everything's nice and quiet, and when we get in there alone I'll break that jaw of yours so that you can't kick for the rest of the season. I'll see that you get out quietly so that you can explain your injury by saying you fell down somewhere." The kicker didn't accept the invitation, for he knew well that Hurst is a dangerous scrapper when he does go up.—New York Sun.

seated with a bottle of wine at one of the tables near the door, with a chair for each foot, and he declined to raise his head when the party entered. M. Pointon, in appearance a gentleman, was sipping wine with him, and they only spoke in monosyllables at long intervals.

"Pollinet smiled significantly at his companions, and they took the nearest table to the Englishman, but still milor did not deign to raise his head.

"Pollinet called for wine for his party and then remarked loudly: 'Pah! surely I am still an Englishman. There must be some of those island pigs near me!' The rest laughed loudly, and all turned their eyes to milor, but he did not even raise his eyes, though the secretary cast one searching glance in Pollinet's direction.

"'Ah,' resumed Pollinet, 'there are English yonder, and the same! nauseates me! Look at that man's back and his hair! Pah! Thou barbarous islanders!'

"Again the party laughed, and Pointon whispered a warning to his master, who yawned and made some coarse reply.

"The attack was not succeeding as well as Pollinet had expected. It was like throwing stones at a wooden figure, and he became angry and sent a waiter for Blanc, the proprietor.

"'What do you mean, Blanc,' said Pollinet, raising his voice so that he could be heard all over the room, 'by allowing pigs of Englishmen to defile your establishment which we honor by our customs? Turn them out instantly!'

"'Oh—oh, monsieur!' said the unhappy Blanc in a whisper. 'I beg pardon, but it is an English milor and his attendant.'

"'As I know, and I tell you to turn them out, unless you want to lose our custom.'

"Poor Blanc, afraid of offending either party, was white and perspiring at every pore. 'But, monsieur, he alone—oh!' (aside to me, but he heard) 'yes, I will. Eh, what he is terrible, and I—I dare not.'

"'Perhaps so, but I had a purpose. I wished you to bear my arrangements with your servant. My principal has chosen his weapons. He elects to fight with nature's weapons—his naked fists. So you will prepare yourself at once, monsieur.'

"Pollinet sprang forward, for Georges was before him. 'What! he accepted! In this an insult, Pointon? Impossible! Have you no notions of honor, you English? Name your weapons, I say!'

"'I have already done so,' said Pointon, with a grim smile.

"'And we refuse,' cried Georges. 'Your suggestion is an insult!'

"'My principal has been insulted,' said Pointon coolly. 'He demands satisfaction, and if monsieur is not ready to five minutes he will break him.'

"Again there was a confusion of tongues. They would not stay to be insulted any longer. They would leave the room and publish the English brutes to the world. But milor stood with his back against the door, with a grim smile on his lips, and there was not one of them who cared to ask him to move.

"Presently milor glanced at his watch and then began to direct himself of his coat and vest. 'Is your principal going to defend himself like a man, or be whipped as a cow and?' asked Pointon of Georges.

"Again there was a torrent of speech, especially from Georges, and Pollinet made no preparation. 'Very well. Time!' said the secretary, and milor squared up to his opponent, who was livid, and touched him lightly on the cheek.

"'I warn you,' said Pointon privately to Georges, that monsieur will find it difficult to fight in his coat. Once more are you ready?'

"'A moment,' said Georges, and there was a horrid consultation among the six, who were thoroughly cowed, after which Georges spoke. 'We protest against this,' he said, 'but M. Pollinet will fight, but we shall demand satisfaction for the outrage.'

"'You shall have it,' said Pointon gaily. In silence Pollinet was divested of his coat and vest and faced the English man with far less confidence than one would expect from such a hero.

"'Time!' called Pointon again, and the encounter began. Milor's enemy had gone. He was no longer a drawling, lazy aristocrat, but an athlete. He began by dealing a light blow on his opponent's face, which drew blood and brought such a cross it look of surprise on his face that Pointon could not restrain his merriment, but the next moment the brave broke into a fury and rushed on milor, his hands going like windmills. The latter played with him, contenting himself by warding off the blows, and only occasionally dealt one himself, till at last he floored the Frenchman with a left hander on the jaw.

"His friends crowded round Pollinet, helpedly gesticulating and chattering, and Pointon had to sponge his face and fan him.

"'Brutal! Brutal!' exclaimed Georges in a state of fiery indignation.

"'Time!' said Pointon, looking at his watch, and unwillingly the heavy was made to rise and face his antagonist. The duelist's attack was more feeble this time, and milor punished him a little more severely, finally sending him to the ground, again moaning and groaning. Again hands and voices were raised in horror.

"Georges knelt over him and then turned to Pointon. 'Monsieur, he said, getting his words out with difficulty, 'honor is satisfied. My principal acknowledges defeat.'

"'No, no,' said milor, condescending to speak French for the first time, 'this is a duel to the death. You must remember. Monsieur, who has sent so many men to death, will not appreciate an encounter in which neither his antagonist nor himself is killed.'

"A groan of utterest indignation went through the group. The totality of the Englishmen! Was it not incredible? They would publish the affair all over the city, all over France.

"'As you like,' said the barrister, with a grim delight that made their hearts sink. 'I did not begin the business, remember, and what I call brutality is to insult an inoffensive man and then pusillanimously claim, pig,' addressing the prostrate brave, 'got up!'

There was some protest, but the barrister was inflexible, and again Pollinet had to face him, and the Englishman fought to punish this time. He delivered his blows with strength and science, till the brave made no attempt to retaliate, but with his hands before his face and groaning at every blow, sought to escape his antagonist. But it was useless. Milor meant to teach a stern lesson, and, with his antagonist crouching for mercy, he finished with a terrible blow between the eyes that sent Pollinet crashing to the floor, where he lay senseless.

"The barrister stood over him. 'As this is a coward,' he said in tones of the greatest contempt, spurning the body with his foot, 'as this is a coward, I refuse to soil my hands any longer on his cowardly carcass. But I give you to understand that if I meet him again in this city or elsewhere I shall claim to finish our duel. Pointon, assist me to dress.'

"In deed assist the barrister put on his coat, and, with a polite 'Bonsoir' they left the room and return to the public room to find that in their absence all nothing had occurred.

"The next day The Times of the Mot Mots was to the page and universally of rage and though

GANOVAS' SUCCESSOR.

A Brave Warrior and Ideal Statesman Is Deposed Sovereign.

A wise statesman, a brave old soldier, and an honest, loyal man is now at the head of Spain's government, and just so powerful the Spanish people feel in the name of the house. He is General Marcelo de Azcarraga, who succeeds the late Canovas as premier and minister of war.

Madrid and its people in every capital of the world are interested in knowing how Canovas succeeded in falling the lock of longitude in a nation through a crisis of more than a month's duration.

The news when received this heroic letter dropped to the floor when called by the queen regent and said, with the simple dignity of the soldier: "I am proud to my gentlemen and loyally obey I will understand it." General Azcarraga is a native of Marella, the capital of the Bailiwick, and is about 63 years of age. He began his military career at the age of 18 as a second lieutenant in the regular army. By efficient and brilliant work he won promotion, was advanced from rank to rank, and was finally sent to the war office in Madrid. From a captain he was made a commandant, and in 1871 was sent to Cuba. At the head of a Spanish expeditionary corps he was in his element and performed several deeds and important to success with marked success.

On his return to Spain he held the office of assistant secretary of state on several occasions and acted in supreme council of military affairs. He commanded the army, was made a lieutenant general and finally, being for a time in command of the provinces of Navarre and Valencia. In 1893 he entered the cabinet as minister of war. He went out with the Conservative party government, but was returned to an position when the Conservative ministry was defeated in 1895. As the head of the Spanish war department during the Cuban and Philippine insurrections post in progress he has gained the entire confidence of the people, who believe that if his plans had been carried out Spain would long ago have been successful in both places.

A Striking Monument.

Nowhere in the world can be found a more striking monument than that erected on the shores of Lake Issy Kul in central Asia in honor of the Russian General Prjevalski, a famous explorer of that region. The tomb is followed out in the summit of a jutting cliff on the eastern margin of the lake, and the monument consists of an enormous rough hewn block of gray granite, 25 feet high, over which is thrown a chart of central Asia.

Understood the Case.

Mrs. Lakeside—I wish to get a divorce from my husband for outrageous cruelty, inhumanity, brutality, and support.

Chicago Lawyer—I must have $50 retaining fee first, madam.

"But I haven't got it. I spent the last dollar my husband gave me for this bonnet five very mornings."

"Have you any money?"

"Not for several days and—"

"Well, perhaps the proximate you wish to marry will lend it to you."—New York Weekly.

Not to Them.

Myrtle—They say that you made a regular fool of Algy Persons at the islands last week.

Maud—No, they are wrong. I might have done it for one thing.

Myrtle—What was that?

Maud—Somebody had finished the job before I got hold of him.—Cleveland Leader.

Poetry and Much Prose.

General Porter tells a story of his farewell to Mark Twain once when Mark was going away. "I said: 'Good-by, Mark. May God be with you always.' He drawingly replied, 'I—I—pe—he—ll—bar—I—hope, too, that he may find some leisure—moments—to—take—care—of—you.'"—Argonaut.

The Impediment.

She—I think Mr. Stone is just too mean and stingy for anything. He just won't buy his wife a wheel.

He—You mistake him, my love. He'd be perfectly willing to buy it, only he's too fat to touch her to ride and too jealous to want my cousin to act as her instructor.—Brooklyn Life.

Wouldn't Punish Him.

"Why don't you get in nothing, Mr. Suffin?" she asked.

"A man eating shark has been seen near here," he replied.

"Man eating!" she repeated. "Oh, well, he wouldn't touch you then."—Chicago Post.

The Boston Cook.

Mistress—When you came here a few days ago, you said your name was Mary. Now I find in your book that it is Bitts.

Cook—Oh, madam, that's all right. Mary is my proshnym.—Exchange.

Cancer

Mrs. A. H. Crosby, of 181 Kerr St., Memphis, Tenn., paid no attention to a small lump in her breast, but it soon developed into a cancer of the most malignant type. The best physicians in New York treated her, and finally declared her case hopeless. As a last resort, S. S. S. was given, and an immediate improvement resulted; a few bottles cured her completely, and the cancer of the disease has returned for ten years.

HATE AND MATE.

How Love Was Spoiled Across Bed in a Barn Loft.

"I have no waste affection upon a horse," said the dealer. "They care nothing for their master or their home or each other. All they care for is their stable.

"They are not all like that," said a lady who was looking over the line for to go the west with the intention of making a purchase. "I remember an elegant pair of Morgan horses, Natchez and Mate, brother and sister, owned in Northfield, Mass., when I was a child. They were raised in northern Vermont and when they were first brought to Massachusetts they were sold to two different men, but they grew so homesick and lonely that they were of no use until Mr. Eastman, an intelligent farmer, claimed them from his and purchased them both.

"They worked or drove nicely in double harness, but one day Mrs. Eastman, having occasion to drive to the village, had Mate harnessed to a light buggy and asked my mother, who was a near neighbor, to accompany her. Mrs. Eastman's two children staying with my brother and me while they were away.

"As soon as Mate caught hearing than Natchez galloped out for her, first with low, soft nicks, then with plaintive whinnies, and at length with loud neighs. We children were attracted to the barn by his frantic cries, and, as none of the men was about, we tried to quiet him by giving him tubfuls, but it was of no use—he plunged about until he broke his halter and escaped into the yard. Fortunately we had sense enough to shut the strong gate, and, in spite of his wheeling and plunging about, he found himself a prisoner. Then such an echo as there was! He pranced around and across the yard, and his calls for his mate were like terrible shrieks, we children watching him from the roof of a low shed, where we had climbed to avoid be out of the way.

"At length, after one of his calls, he listened with his head in the air, and, going to the side of the yard toward the village, he stretched his neck over the fence and called again. This time, away to the northward, we heard a faint response.

"'They are coming!' said my brother. 'Mate is answering. I can see the dust! I can smell Mate! Mate is running!'

"That was the fact. Nearer they came and nearer, the beautiful white horse on a straight run, the two mockers in the light buggy helpless and terror stricken, holding the reins, but making no effort to control the seemingly uncontrollable horse. But as Mate approached the house he staggered her pace, turned decorously into the yard and trotted surely up to the gate to receive her brother's welcome.

"These horses fairly kissed each other in their delight, and of course they were utterly unconscious of the desperate fright they had given the two ladies, who sank down on the green turf and sobbed with thankfulness at their escape.

"We could no more control the creature than we could control the wind," said my mother. The moment she heard Nate's cry she took the bit in her teeth and ordered down into a run. Of course I knew the harness was strong and the buggy safe, but I was afraid of meeting a team or that she would make so short a turn into the yard as to upset us.

"Meantime the two horses had recovered from their excitement and were standing in great contentment. Mate was nibbling grass and pulling up great mouthfuls and holding them over the fence to share with her brother, who took them deliberately from her mouth.

"'Is not that beautiful?' said my mother. 'These love scenes almost humanize.'

"'Yes,' said Mr. Eastman, coming up, 'but it is an unreasoning love and might be the means of doing a lot of mischief. I think I will put them into the back pasture, where they can pull continually shoulder to shoulder and be happy.'

"This was done. I often saw the beautiful creatures plodding away and was thankful that there was no danger of their being again separated."—On Animal Friends.

An Eskimo Legend.

Among the Eskimos, the angakok or sorcerer who would visit Sedna, the goddess who lives underground or in the depths of the ocean, yet ruling over some of the countries to which souls go after death, must first pass the arsenal—the dwelling of the happy dead—and then cross an abyss in which a wheel as slippery as ice is constantly turning round. Arriving at the house of Sedna, he finds it guarded by terrible animals, sometimes described as seals, and sometimes as dogs, and when within the house passage he has to cross an abyss by means of a bridge as narrow as a knife edge.—Antiquary.

A THYING SHAVE.

Thrilling Experience of a Prisoner Who Had Escaped from a Wagon.

Here is the story one traveling man told another in the smoking car. Hardin, of Wichita, report. Said the traveling man: "I was down south on a business trip some months ago and I did a pretty fair business for that section. One evening I got into a town where I expected to do some trading, and after having supped I sat on the hotel veranda smoking when I noticed a crowd coming down the street and there was considerable excitement apparent. As the crowd drew near I saw it was a lynch tug party. Ahead of me a hard a rope and they were bringing along a colored man who had been caught red handed in some crime for which lynching is the penalty in that section. It was a wild, crazy mob that had the man, and I'll never tell you what suspected me, but I jumped up and went along catching hold of the rope as I went. A couple of men over the limb of a tree and the colored man was strung up and the end of the rope fastened. Then those who had revolvers took turns at firing shots into the dangling corpse.

"The next morning after I had breakfast I went out for a walk and passed a barber shop. I needed a shave and I went in and took a seat in the chair. The barber was a colored man, and I recollection that he looked at me in a peculiar way as I entered the shop, but it did not impress me at the time. He lathered me in a slow, deliberate way, and then he got out his razors, stropped one of them carefully and prepared to shave me. As he drew the razor down over my right cheek he remarked: 'You is a stranger in dish yere town, isn't you, sah?' 'Yes,' I said. 'I came last night.' 'I saw you last night,' he remarked. 'Where was I?' I asked. 'You had hold of the rope when you passed dish place.'

"My heart sank down to my shoes and I gave myself up to silent prayer. This man had me at his mercy. He could have cut my throat with one stroke of his razor, and he knew it and I knew it. 'I saw you again,' he said. 'It was where I asked them to let de hangin. You had hold of de rope dat time, didn't you?' 'I yes,' I gasped. I thought sure my time had come, and that he was just playing with me as a cat plays with a mouse, and that he was secretly enjoying my terror previous to giving me a final stroke. But he calmly went on shaving me, and as he combed up the stubble on the chin he remarked: 'You is from de north, sah, where de colored man has his rights, sah. You might to know better than to hang a pore colored man down in dish pyre part of the country where he don' get no trial.'

"And that ended the conversation. I never wanted to run so badly in my life, but I was a prisoner, and I was weak as a baby until he got through. When he had wiped his razor on me, I gave him a quarter and told him to keep the change and left the shop. Say, if you ever hear of me mixing into a lynching bee again you want to have me placed in an asylum. That taught me a lesson. How did I know that the man shaving me was not a relative of the man that was lynched? It might have been his brother and he would not have dared to open his mouth. That time I knew trouble and found barrels of it."—Harrisburg Telegram.

The oldest book.

The oldest book in the world to which a positive date can be assigned is an assortment of proverbs somewhat after the style of the proverbs collected by Solomon. The work is accredited to Ptah hotep, an Egyptian king, and Egyptologists assign to it an antiquity of at least 3000 B. C. Abraham was called to leave his home in Ur of the Chaldees, 1921 B. C., so that the volume was written 1,100 years before the beginning of Jewish history. The college is placed by most chronologists at B. C. 2350, so the book, if its dating is correct, must have been written before the Book. Methuselah was born B. C. 3317, so that this papyrus was prepared and these proverbs were collected when the oldest man on record was a lively young fellow of 300 years.

WHAT CURED HIM.

The Story of a Man Who Had Assisted at a Lynching.

"No," said the Texan, "I hain't had a hand in a hangin' for a long time, an ef the Lord forgives me for what I have had to do with them I won't do it again."

"You must be contemplating a removal to the effete intellectuality of Boston," remarked a reporter.

"No. You see, it was in a way," said the Texan seriously: "Long about five year ago in August, and it was hotter'n Phil Sheridan in Texas that year, me and four or five of the boys come across a peaked lookin' feller come day with a boss that we knowed didn't belong to him. We stopped him very polite and ast him where he got it, and he said he was a stranger there and had nothin but a wagon about seven mile back and off the road with a dead boss hitched to it and a sick little gal in it likely to die, and he was out seen of he couldn't find a doctor or a woman or somebody to do somethin, for the little gal was all he had on earth and he couldn't stand to have her die like that. He told us he had picked up the boss we found him ridin because he was not able to walk fast enough and wouldn't we for God's sake tell him where he could find somebody to see the little gal and then ef we wanted to square him up with Texas for takin the boss he wouldn't have a word to say.

"Well, we had heerd that kind of a story many a time, and the first one that had been spread out before us saved the man's life and lost us a boss and a subscription for the sufferers that we took up, and we had been learned a lesson. So when this chap give us a racket like that we give him seven minutes for pra'r and swung him up.

"That was the end of it for the present, but about a month after that me and one of the boys happened to be ridin along the road where that feller told us about his little gal, and we seen something that I reckon I won't forget of I live to be a thousand years old. There was only a ramshackle old wagon with a skeleton of a horse in the shafts, and layin on some old rags in the wagon was the little bones of a child, all picked clean and white by the buzzards, just like the boss was.

"I kinder choked up when I seen that, and my partner shoot the same, and while I was standin there thinkin he reached down under the side of the wagon feel and picked up a slip of paper pinned to the wood. It was wrote on with a lead pencil and was mighty near faded out, but what was left was this": taking from his pocket very carefully a silver fob, from which he took a small and crumpled sheet of paper he string strap it the low, in a child's hand, "'Here jes I want wate as long ger for you to cum Because I'" "That was all there was to it," he concluded, "and then me and my partner looked at each other and never said a word. There was a big funeral for the little gal and her pa and the poor old boss that died in the harness, but it'll take a good deal more'n any funeral to set me straight with myself and get my feelin's like they was before I found them bones and the little scrap of writin. A Great Leader.

At one of Richter's rehearsals in St. James' hall, I witnessed his mastery over his men and observed his manner and method. He was first of all amiable and painstaking. He did not scold or find fault, but quickly and persistently corrected. The musicians respected him because they saw he was a complete master of his score and could tell them just how to play the difficult passages. In this rehearsal there was a peculiar passage for the French horns, which after several trials did not please him. He said: "Never mind, now gentlemen, stay a few minutes, if you please, after the rehearsal, and we will try it together."

At the close of the rehearsal Herr Richter, while the players were scattering, climbing up to where the horn players were seated, saying, "Now I will show you in a moment just what I want." He took up the first horn and without looking at the score blew the short passage, giving it a degree of tone color which fairly pulsated with pathos. Then he was tried it two or three times, earnestly striving to mimic him, and the director thanked them heartily.—Leader Cu.
